EMOTIONALLY PREPARING FOR BACK TO SCHOOL FOLLOWING THE TRAUMA OF LAST YEAR

COVID-19 has disrupted routines, increased anxiety in parents and kids, and taken a toll on all of us emotionally. Many kids are experiencing a range of emotions about the back to school season, unsure of what this year will bring and still experiencing some of the emotional trauma of last year. During this Facebook Live session, we'll be sharing research-based tips for preparing your family for the school year ahead. We'll also be ready to answer your questions about how to best prepare your family emotionally for a return to school.

THE MYTH OF LEARNING LOSS

Many parents are anxiously awaiting the upcoming school year with concerns about learning loss and social/emotional trauma as a result of the last school year. While the 2020 school year looked different from other years at Anastasis, we remain confident that our educational design remains the best for kids. The Anastasis learning model always meets kids where they are and moves them forward making Learning Loss a myth.

It's not a change for us, we've always had:

- Small class sizes (12/1)
- A deep focus on social/emotional health
- Individualized learning and assessment practices (there's no such thing as 'falling behind')
- Single teacher-led classrooms where every student is known academically, socially, and emotionally
- Seamless technology integration
